Climate Laws Advancing in Many Countries: Survey
January 14, 2013

Related articles
Karim Raslan: Man Moving Forward 5:15pm Dec 14, 2012
Doha Climate Talks Throw Lifeline to Kyoto Protocol 2:29pm Dec 9, 2012
Ancestral Russia Lures Land-Hungry Mexican Mennonites 12:09pm Dec 9, 2012
Doha Climate Change Conference Faces an Indonesian Test 2:27pm Dec 5, 2012
Seas Rising 60 Percent Faster Than UN Forecast: Study 9:42am Nov 28, 2012

SHARE THIS PAGE
Like Post a comment
Sign Up to see what your friends like.

Share with google+:

0Like 7Shares 0Comments

Post a comment
Please login to post comment

Comments
Be the first to write your opinion!

Paris. Major economies are now implementing important legislation on climate change, according to a survey published on Monday.

Out of 33 countries, 32 have introduced or are pushing ahead with "significant" laws on climate, it said.

Most of them are emerging economies.

In 2012, Mexico passed a law that sets a target for reducing greenhouse-gas emissions by 30 percent by 2020 compared with a "business as usual" scenario.

South Korea approved a bill that will lead to an emissions trading system by 2015. Japan introduced a carbon tax and a law promoting low-carbon development in the cities, and Vietnam passed a forestry protection scheme, REDD Plus.

In China, the world’s biggest emitter by volume, the southern industrial area of Shenzhen passed the country’s first local legislation for managing carbon emissions. The country also began to draft a nationwide law on climate change.

The survey was published by GLOBE International, an association of legislators, which was meeting in London on Monday and Tuesday.

Some laws are inspired by energy costs rather than by climate change itself, but led to the same goal of energy security and efficiency, it said.

The report said legislative changes at home could be a useful spur to the UN talks on climate change, which are making meager progress toward a worldwide pact on emissions.

"[They] ultimately give world leaders the political space to go further and faster in the UN negotiations, helping provide a foundation for a comprehensive, global deal by 2015."

Agence France-Presse

Supreme Court Justice Hopeful of Rape Remark Sparks Anger
Indonesian Nike Workers ‘Denied Pay Rise’
Justice Hopeful Apologizes for Remarks on Rape
Bakries May Scrap Bumi Exit Plan if Rothschild Returns
Inundated Jakarta Should Expect Flooding to Worsen
Nike Workers Win Battle for Wages
Risks That May Hinder Boom in Indonesia
SBY Wants Indonesia to Listen to Minorities
Roy Suryo Installed as Indonesia’s New Sports Minister
SBY to Welcome Argentine President, Japanese PM